Josh Kale is pursuing his master's degree in art therapy and counseling at Edinboro University of Pennsylvania. He completed internships with Art Therapy Without Borders, UMAR, a nonprofit dedicated to promoting community inclusion and independence for adults with intellectual and developmental disabilities, and HopeWay, a residential mental health treatment center. He most values his AATA membership for support in professional development through the Mentor Match program, networking opportunities, and educational resources.

Navigating graduate school as a student with learning disabilities, Kale is grateful to have the support of “wonderful professors, advisors, and mentors who have helped me get to where I am today.” He is eager to give back to the community and advocates with Council for Children's Rights Charlotte and serves on the board of directors of Disability Rights & Resources.

Kale's graphic designs have been featured in TEDx and Psychology Today and earned him the “The Power of Design to Change the World” award from Sterling Brands New York and the “Joy in Service” award at the annual Sunrise “Shine On” Leadership Conference. “I use my talents to create infographics on our field,” says Kale. “I guess this is my little way of helping to advocate, educate, and promote art therapy.”
