

Wharf Rehabilitation

Earn 7 Professional Development Hours

The Content

The rehabilitation of marine and waterfront structures is necessary to extend service life, restore or increase structural capacity, and/or address event-related damage. Proper repairs require an understanding of deterioration mechanisms, structural configuration of marine facilities, and efficient methods of marine contractor work.

During the course of the workshop, participants will learn about:

- The primary types of waterfront structures (e.g. wharves, piers, and bulkheads);
- Deterioration mechanisms for marine structural materials;
- Above and underwater inspection standards and basic techniques;
- Service life evaluation;
- Structural assessment of existing structures; and
- Protection and structural repair.

Course topics will be presented through discussion of existing codes, standards, and guidelines; heavy illustration; and case study.

The Instructor

Stephen Famularo, MSc, P.E., D.PE, is the director of Marine Engineering at McLaren Engineering, New York City. During his 21-year engineering career Steve has led the inspection, design, permitting, and resident engineering for rehabilitation and new construction for hundreds of piers, wharves, bulkheads and jetties. He is a commercially trained diver with inspection experience throughout the United States and Caribbean. He was also the lead expert for the development of the NYC EDC Waterfront Facilities Maintenance Management System, a web-based database for managing the over 520 miles of NYC's waterfront. Steve is a certified Port Engineer through the ASCE Academy of Coastal, Ocean, Port, and Navigation Engineers.
